Have you seen CONTINUOUS SELLERS/SUBSCRIPTIONS on credit, debit or prepaid charging cards? If so, please comment below! English (United Kingdom) English (United States) Español (Latinoamérica) December 28, 2018 Posted by: eMBadmin law enforcement agencies continue to warn that ongoing payment scams are on the rise and it is important to take the necessary measures to avoid becoming a victim. Where can ongoing sellers/subscribers find the most reliable seller services for their business? Just read below for more on this topic. With e-commerce on the rise worldwide, the risks of becoming a victim through Internet purchases are increasing. This is especially true of purchases made through credit cards. The term payment constantly refers to cases when consumers are caused to submit their credit card numbers, which are then used illegally to charge these consumers monthly fees. As a result, a consumer's credit card account is charged a periodary payment of up to $40-$60 a month without any notice or authorization. Victims cannot notice any hidden charges unless they review the terms and conditions associated with the activities they participate in. In fact, phishing is called a continuous payment scam because if you are deceived by this type of scammer, you will experience a continuity of regret. So you fall into a program that charges you every month for worthless services. Overall, constant payment scammers don't put much effort into implementing their programs because the majority of consumers don't read small print. Here are some warning signs to include: Don't forget to check the company, domain, and products you're offered. Google can help you with this: just use those terms plus fraud, phishing, and billing. When clicking on a free or affordable offer, use a prepaid debit card with no relation to your bank account instead of the requested credit card. The dispute fees are not authorized to your credit card issuer. It is mandatory to go through all the fine prints, as well as the terms and conditions before buying anything. Google to find out if anyone has mentioned the offer as a scam. Don't forget about online paid advertising. Paid banner ads don't always link to sites you're interested in. Review your credit card statement regularly for unauthorized charges. To prevent fraud, contact suspected company immediately. Request a payment stop and record of all information relating to your interaction with the company. Victims can also refuse delivery. No failure to contact the respective financial institutions or credit card provider to request a fee fraud. EMB Offers the Best for Continuity/Subscription Merchants Continuity billing scams has become a common phenomenon. So no wonder that credit card issuer and processing companies are taking measures to prevent them in the best way possible. Here, it should also be noted that reimbursements are also on the rise. This is very much caused by businesses relying on subscriptions with periodically paid. In fact, friendly fraud is the main reason why the majority of payments are periodically reimbursed. So it's no stretch to imagine the potential significant loss of revenue caused by chargebacks, which ultimately affect the company's profitability. With all this in mind, ongoing/subscriber sellers should only work with such a reputable credit card processing eMerchantBroker.com. Because subscription-based businesses may have difficulty getting approved for a seller account because they are marked as high risk, it's important to switch to a respectable high-risk processor. With EMB, you don't need to worry eMerchantBroker.com is considered the nation's #1 risk processor and is considered an A+ company by BBB. Moreover, the Card Payment Option has given an A rating to EMB. That if I hung up now and didn't agree to get the part of the credit they gave me soon after and got in that moment they would charge me in full. CSR also says that if I try to call my bank to stop the charges they will go ahead and just process the payment in full. I hung up and now they're charging my card in full for a product I didn't even get. ... Read MoreRead 3 Customer ReviewsBBB Business profiles may not be copied for sales or advertising purposes.
